

Interesting facts

A big bite

It could crush a car by using its mighty teeth!

Wow, what a bite!

Biggest bite force ever

The bite force of the megalodon is three more times powerful than a T-rex!

That is one strong chomp!

A Dog?

The name for a baby megalodon is called 'pup'!

Not the kind we know!

The Death-Devouring Megalodon

The mighty Megalodon-also known as Carcharocles Megalodon-its latin name, surreptitiously, roamed the seven seas devouring anything in its path. This killing-machine is the second largest marine species (the blue whale being the largest) to have ever existed. In addition to this, these beasts thrived in the globe's shallow waters over 17 million years ago. Fortunately for us, these colossal carnivores became extinct over 2.5 million years ago due to not having anything to feast on or adapting to colder climates.

There's No Place Like Home

Roaming throughout the seven seas, in the waters of the warm Red sea, the death-devouring megalodon once ruled the oceans millions of years ago. Creatures in the ocean feared this killing-machine who once skulked the sea. Throughout the years, Marine biologists regularly encounter fossilised body parts from the mighty meg across the world, including; the Pacific Ocean; the Atlantic Ocean, the Mediterranean Sea and not forgetting the forbidden Red Sea.

Expert biologist, Mike oxlong, stated "I still don't believe the king of the ocean (the megalodon) is extinct: 80% of the ocean has yet to be explored. The killing machine could still exist, in the depths of the unknown."

Marine biologist-Mike oxlong

Weird but Wonderful!

The Megalodon, -also known as the king of the ocean-could crush a car by using its teeth! This killing-machine measured in at a whopping 40-60 feet in size. In addition to this, it had razor-sharp teeth that could pierce through meat; in fact, they had approximately 276 teeth! Breathing with their gills, these mighty beasts could chase down their prey for long periods of time making them an efficient predator.

What's for dinner?

The mighty creature only eats meat [which means it is a carnivore] such as : whales , dolphins , seals and probably other sharks! The killing-machine can eat 2,500 pounds every day which for us humans is like eating 3,300 cans of tuna!

Is It A Boy Or Girl?

When a baby megalodon was born it was six feet (in length), often baby megalodons got eaten by other adult sharks due to the fact that they were smaller. Even though baby megs were the biggest sharks and they had sharp teeth; it still didn't protect them.

